Dean

J. Ben Robinson, D.D.S., Sc. D., F.A.C.D.

Since his graduation in 1914 from the Dental School of the University of Maryland, Dr. Robinson has been an increasingly valuable source of strength to his alma mater and to his profession. As the Dean of the School from 1924 to the present he has succeeded in establishing and maintaining high standards of dental education and professional service in the world's first dental college. For four years we have been the fortunate recipients of the thorough training and wise direction contributed by a capable faculty selected and guided by the Dean. Our diplomas will reflect the values derived from the School's excellent reputation, which is a very important part of Dr. Robinson's contribution to the development of the B.C.D.S. For over a score of years Dr. Robinson has been one of the most distinguished and most effective leaders in dentistry. As a prolific and stimulating writer, as an impressive speaker, and as a mold of policies and preserver of the worthwhile traditions, the Dean has constantly and perseveringly been in the front line in the march of dental progress. We salute Dr. Robinson as a man to be proudly hailed in the story of American Dentistry.

In Tribute

William T. G. Morton

To William T. G. Morton belongs the honor and the credit for introducing sulphuric ether as an effective anesthetizing agent in cases requiring operative surgery. Fate seems to have assigned him to a set of circumstances in which he was exposed to all the factors relating to the current status of anesthesia, and nature had provided him with those essential qualities of mind and heart that led him inevitably to exploit these factors in the interest of humanity.

Morton began the study of dentistry under the tutelage of Dr. Horace Wells and, for a short period of time, was associated with him in a partnership dental practice in Boston. He studied medicine in the office of Dr. Charles Thomas Jackson, a chemist of unusual ability, who had experimented with the exhilarating and anesthetic properties of sulphuric ether.

It is a notable fact that Morton approached his task by way of the experimental method. Morton began by experimenting on animals in order to determine the action of the particular agent on the living organism. Having by this method proved both the efficacy and safety of sulphuric ether in producing anesthesia he applied it to use in operative surgery. On September 30, 1846, he administered ether to a patient for the purpose of extracting a difficult tooth.

Subsequently, he made other tests; and finally, on October 16, 1846, Dr. Morton administered ether vapor to a patient in the Massachusetts General Hospital in preparation for a surgical operation. The patient manifested no signs of pain, and on October 17, the experiment was repeated with equally favorable results. As a consequence of these successful tests Dr. Morton was proclaimed by the medical profession and the people of Boston as the discoverer of anesthesia.

When Morton's experiment with ether proved successful he claimed the discovery of a new agent that would produce anesthesia; he tried to hide its identity from everyone, including Dr. J. C. Warren, the surgeon, and he proceeded promptly to patent the agent under the trade name, Letheon. However, when the true nature of the agent became known, Morton conceded that he had received assistance in his experiments with ether vapor from Dr. Jackson and freely agreed to share with him the honor and emoluments occurring from the discovery.

There can be no doubt of Morton's right to the claim that he was the first to administer ether for the definite purpose of producing complete insensibility to physical pain and that the popularization of surgical anesthesia and its world-wide acceptance by science and medicine stemmed from his successful demonstration of it at the Massachusetts General Hospital. And there can be no question of the fact that from his determined, courageous efforts to convince the world of the safety and efficacy of an agent that he had tested and found effective in producing complete insensibility to pain, came directly one of the greatest blessings that has ever been conferred on the human race. Any subsequent errors of judgment on his part with respect to material rewards and benefits should be forgotten or looked upon with pity in the light of the positive values of the rich contribution he made to humanity.

—SOPHOCLES

The Seniors

Four years completed. Four years in which everyone of us has run the gamut of human emotions. We have passed through periods of occasional joy and have plummeted to the depths of despair. Our human resistance has been tried and stretched to the breaking point; a few faltered, but the majority of us are here to taste the fruits of our labor.

And labor it was, because there were many independent forces cooperating to make our existence miserable. Many times we felt ourselves slipping, and the struggle appeared so hopelessly futile that the thought of giving in became easy under the mental and physical strain to which we were subjected. Our mettle was tested, tried, and strained in every manner, form, and fashion imaginable, but was not found wanting.

From Dr. McCarthy's welcoming speech, to the presentation of our diplomas, we have been in a maelstrom of dental life interrupted here and there by a brief interlude that one could call a vacation. We were the Army and Navy class. Under the circumstances of our service many of us who otherwise would not be here, were given the opportunity to study dentistry. The advantages that were given us had never been dreamed of before, even by the most extreme utopian mind. We had our tuition paid and were allotted our living expenses. All that was left for us to do was to put in the hours and do our best.

On that first morning in the hallway of the anatomy building our hearts missed several beats, and when the door to the dissection room was opened, and we saw those metal tables bedecked with their gruesome burdens, we felt like turning tail and heading for Greene Street. The novelty soon wore off, however, and all of us became wise birds who made playmates of our cadavers, along with becoming very familiar with their innards and outards. In histology we were told that we were not expected to be artists, but only to draw what we saw in the microscope. If we had followed this advice our books would still be blank, but we used our vivid imaginations and were able to concoct something approaching what we were supposed to see. In bio-chem we added that "teeny bit" of acid, as instructed by the good Doctor Vanden Bosche, and results were amazing. Physiology was a madhouse—of cats, frogs, terrapins, and kimograph drums, which would always record when the experiment did not require. The Boley gauge was master in our Dental Morphology, and its readings meant the difference between an acceptable carving and one that brought the statement, "All right, get another block and start again." After each lab in bacteriology we awaited the symptoms: nausea, vomiting, coma and death—which fortunately or unfortunately failed to develop. Pharmacology was a course in dental ethics and professional mien. Until we delved into pathology, we did not realize that the human body could be plagued with so many maledictions. Operative and Dr. Randolph made point angles, lines of force, cavo-surface bevels, and the thirty-three steps all there was to dentistry.

ERNEST B. NUTTALL, D.D.S.
Honorary Class President

The clinic at last! We thought that setting foot on the floor would be a panacea for all our ills. More disillusionment! Reprimands followed in incessant succession; we did nothing right and everything wrong. Seven hundred points seemed monumental; even prophys were difficult to complete. Patients seemed to take the brunt of it all, having to return six or seven times before the cavity preparation was checked. This spasm of uncertainty passed and we eventually prepared the teeth with endoform accuracy. Prosthetics proved to be a nightmare of mistakes and redundant work. Plaster hardened too quickly, bite blocks warped, and centric was only something we read about. Crown and bridge was a matter for the patient fellow; after all the Doctors Dosh and Nuttall had only four hands. There was always a piece of calculus in some hidden gingival pocket distal to the third molar that Dr. Biddix would deftly dislodge to the students' embarrassment. Assignments in the different departments permitted us welcome mental relaxation from the dreary thought that points meant everything.

The Senior year brought a change in the school policy. No more points—at least that's what they told us! The strain was just as great; for progress reports had to be compiled and signed each hour, and the thought of having to be busy each minute made many wish that the point system, with its small bit of freedom, would return. As Seniors we had reached the peak of knowledge. The feeling of knowing what it was all about replaced the uncertainty we had shown as Juniors. We were approaching the end with a spirit of exultation, mingled with an almost inconceivable thought of what we would do should graduation find us with too few root canals, too few gold foils, and an over-abundance of amalgam. Disappointments and patients who refused to return to get that Class III foil checked, all made our lives a little more full of anxiety, and put quite a strain on those who in their own minds (no point system, you know) thought that the requirements of last year's senior class were not equalled by the restorations that they had completed this year.

Writing of these things seems all too inadequate and expressionless. Reading of these things might give an impression that life at the B.C.D.S. was one horrendous nightmare following another. Perhaps it was, and yet in retrospect we feel certain that it wasn't. At least, it had become a new way of life, and the thought that we shall never see all the familiar faces together again leaves us with a bitter-sweet feeling.

The Juniors

As the last sands of the sophomore year are washed upon the inexorable shores of time, the class finds itself torn between the conflicting emotions of deep humility and boundless confidence. This dilemma was fostered upon us by the strict supervision we had received clinically, and the unknown quantity of the personal equation.

Out of this chaos, this confusion, came a new sense of professional dignity that alternately challenged the abilities and ennobled the spirit of the group. Because of a long orientation period, the transition was bereft of the clamorous enthusiasm that traditionally characterizes the beginning of the junior year. There was a situation ahead that would allow no procrastination, that would not tolerate the whims and capriciousness of human nature, that would refuse to countenance the imminent impetuosities of inexperience. For these reasons we are now a staid, conservative aggregate whose only desire is to emulate those who have gone before, and to perpetuate a pattern for those who shall come to the B.C.D.S. when we are but dust.

As juniors we had the distinction of introducing into the School a new system of credit tabulation for clinical operative procedure. This system seeks to subordinate expedience and all its dire implications, to the benefit of the patient, his comfort, and his individuality.

It was not without trepidation and anxiety that we approached our new assignments. We hope to accomplish those assignments with the same benignity of spirit and altruistic concern that have characterized the endeavors of the hundred and more classes that have preceded us.

We ardently wish that the judiciousness of our instructors in all things dental will continue to be tempered by a quality of mercy that is not strained. And if some continue to find caries in full dentures, remember: "Who of us is perfect? Even the sun has spots".

Juniors

The Sophomores

Sixteen men and a girl entered the sophomore year. They were all that remained of the entering class of '49. In September transfers swelled the roll to a substantial nineteen.

We continued our career of "famous firsts". We were the first class to use Dr. Shay's new bacteriology manual; the first to use the new crown and bridge endoform; and, of course, the first sophomore class that did not attempt to "gas" the freshmen.

However, the thrill of being sophomores did not overshadow the fact that we were here to learn—and no instructor let us forget that for a minute. We were introduced to all the myriad wonders of bacterial infection, cavity preparation, heart action, foil condensation, and denture construction.

Lunch hours suddenly were absorbed by technic labs; Picozzi started to use his own equipment; Bricken was clocked in the bacteriology lab doing a three-minute mile (with a culture in each hand); the fog in Herman's eye and the college ring on his finger both disappeared; Parent became the custodian of our crown and bridge lecture bulletin board.

Suddenly we found ourselves absorbing a major portion of the knowledge being hurled at us. We realized how important a responsibility would be placed on us by our patients in the not too distant junior year. Only then did we gratefully realize that our foundation was firm indeed, and a fine basis to which we could add our clinical experience.

The Freshmen

With hopes high in our hearts, and but one purpose in our minds, 106 potential dentists, representing 18 states, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and Iraq, entered the B.C.D.S. on September 9th, 1946. This was a far cry from the khaki and blue of the not too distant past. The great majority of us were resuming plans that had been interrupted by a call to arms.

After a mad day of registration, we found ourselves in a whirlwind of laboratories, books, lectures, and finally, examinations. In no time at all confusion resolved itself into a calm, orderly precision and we soon felt that we had been attending dental school for years. That our class was far different from any previous freshman class was evident to even the most uninitiated among us. Almost half our class has left the ranks of bachelorhood and included among that number are twenty "proud papas". Far from serving as a deterrent, that factor has managed to add a note of seriousness to the entire business of study, with the consequence that the greater portion of the class is attacking its studies with great zeal and fervor.

Half a hundred alma maters are represented, ranging in longitude from as far West as the University of Wisconsin and to the East as far as the Dental School of Paris. And militarily, a survey shows that the total number of years spent by the class of 1950 in all the branches of service is over 300. An astonishing average of 3 years of military service per man.

An article published in a recent journal mentioned that classes similar to ours would be interesting to watch from the standpoint of the wide variations in age, abilities and experiences. We construe that as a challenge and we throw down the gauntlet.

The Gorgas Odontological Society was founded in 1916 on principles of scholastic ability, character, and professional bearing. The organization was founded to honor Dr. Ferdinand J. S. Gorgas, a remarkably erudite man; a man to whom dentistry owes much for the benefits which it today enjoys.

At first the organization was somewhat gangling, and unprepossessive; but gradually the young society began to formulate more definitive rules and more exacting requirements. As of 1945, requirements for entrance into the Society were made quite stringent so that today membership is restricted to a selected few.

Gorgas' second post-bellum year found the return-to-normal organization routine almost complete. Several meetings were held during the school year, and guest speakers, outstanding men in their chosen fields, spoke of the latest developments in dentistry.

The climax to this banner year of activity was reached on May 16 at the Hotel Stafford, which was the scene of the formal dinner-dance. Dr. A. Harry Ostrow of Washington, D. C., an alumnus of the B.C.D.S., was the guest speaker, and he delighted his listeners with an instructive talk on the present-day aspects of public health dentistry. This affair also served as the occasion for the presentation of certificates of membership to the seniors, and of membership keys to the juniors.

OFFICERS

President MARSDEN F. STAMP
Secretary WILLIAM M. TALBOTT
Treasurer EDMOND G. VANDEN BOSCHE

This organization was founded in 1942 as a memorial to one of this college's most esteemed teachers. The seminar group established for itself four main purposes: (1) to encourage and stimulate thought and activities along lines of research related to dentistry; (2) to acquaint its members with the latest developments in dental science; (3) to render its members more adept in the presentation of scientific papers; (4) to promote a more rational insight into problems which confront us, as future members of the dental profession.

Dentists Versus Patients

Patients have a habit of arriving late for appointments. I wonder if it's because they get frightened as the time approaches?

Jittery patients thumb through many more magazines than I can afford.

Nowadays patients insist on a running documentary on what I'm doing or plan to do, thereby taking up much of my productive time.

If a patient breaks an artificial tooth or denture, he always claims it happened while he was eating mashed potatoes, when actually he was probably trying to crack a walnut with it.

The public doesn't seem to mind rising prices in almost every commodity, but let the dentist charge more to keep up with the general trend, and they are sure to call it unethical.

Strides made in dental techniques have now practically eliminated pain.

People are ignorant. You use novocain to extract a tooth but that still leaves an open socket in the mouth. Of course an open wound is going to hurt when the anesthesia wears off and the patient should expect it.

After carefully rigging a contraption in the patient's mouth to keep a cavity free from moisture, the patient invariably probes it with his tongue or upsets it by making an unnecessary comment.

Parents don't realize how important care of children's teeth is. But they do expect special rates for children even though it's much more difficult and takes far more patience to work on them.

My dentist always keeps me waiting in his office for a half hour in spite of the fact that I have an appointment.

Magazines in dentists' offices are practically antique and the page I want is always torn out.

I like to know what's going on, but most dentists love to prepare things behind your back and then spring them on you in a pincer movement.

It seems to me dentists ought to be able to do more permanent work on artificial teeth. It's pretty embarrassing to have a bridge break in company or to have a plate fall out of your mouth.

Everything is becoming so specialized now, it's as hard to find a general dental practitioner as it is to find a medical one. And the high prices these specialists like to charge!

I hate the drilling. There ought to be a way to eliminate this drawn-out pain.

Consider the irony when a dentist gives you a shot of novocain and pulls a tooth. He claims credit for being painless, but doesn't mention the sleepless night you put in after the stuff wears off.

My dentist stuffs my mouth full of cotton and metal gadgets so I can hardly breathe, let alone talk, and then he expounds all his pet theories on everything from politics to horse racing.

When I was a child, we used a piece of string and a door knob if we had a toothache. But my dentist insists on pampering my child's teeth and charges as much for her as he does for me.

The Platinum Filling

By PHILLIP LOUIS COLLINS*

Dr. Arthur Ryley drummed thin fingers on the desk of his new office at 32 Handel Allee, and waited for his first patient. A little nervous but happy, he reflected on the new life he was beginning in Berlin.

The only American dentist in the German capital! With all the clerks and secretaries of the embassy, and the representatives of so many American businesses flocking to the bustling city, his future seemed assured indeed. It was October 1889 and the warm autumn sun, streaming through the open windows, played drowsily over his glistening equipment.

There was a sharp knock at the door. Before the dentist could scramble up to open it, a tall, broad, breathless man in ill-fitting clothes entered and quickly slammed the door behind him. Dr. Ryley could not help noticing the deep lines of apprehension on the strong face and its look of relief after the door had closed.

The man pointed to his jaw and gestured violently. "Will it hurt?" he asked in a strangely accented English.

Dr. Ryley, though somewhat astonished at the appearance of his first patient, smiled professionally and indicated the chair.

"You are an American doctor?"

Ryley nodded.

"Good! They say Americans do not waste time."

The man's voice was deep and sonorous.

"I haven't much time," he continued. "Even at this moment they might be on their way. Always they follow me! Always they watch me! I do not know if I shall be able to contain myself much longer."

He shrugged his shoulders despairingly.

"Who is following you, my good man?" asked the somewhat mystified Dr. Ryley.

"Why the detectives, of course. One would think I was a common criminal. Never for a moment am I out of their sight."

The stranger laid his head on the rest of the dentist's chair and said abruptly:

"Enough of this. My tooth is aching terribly. Get on with your work."

Ryley began examining the man's mouth. He was disconcerted yet curious, for the visitor with his forward direct manner, his immobile yet sensitive features, his rich, deep voice and poorly tailored clothes presented a puzzle. The dentist had the peculiar feeling of having seen his patient before.

He soon completed the examination and informed the man that all he needed was a simple filling. He was told to proceed and put in a filling of the best material available.

"The best material is quite expensive. I am sure you would be as well satisfied with a cheaper material; for instance, porcelain or . . ."

"Nonsense, doctor. Nobody ever told me anything was expensive. What is this material?"

"Why platinum, of course," said the dentist.

The man in the chair burst into laughter. "Platinum! platinum, you say! Why I own more platinum than anyone on earth." And he laughed heartily at what he evidently considered a fine joke.

"Go to it, go to it! Money means nothing to me. Platinum it shall be."

The American dentist quickly and skillfully filled the stranger's tooth and the man stepped from the chair, a smile on his face.

"That wasn't half as bad as I expected," he said pleasantly as he reached for his pocketbook. He opened it and stopped. His face grew red and flushed. The pocketbook was empty.

"I am exceedingly sorry, doctor," he stammered. "I must have forgotten to fill it when I left this morning."

Dr. Ryley looked at the fellow and smiled.

"It's quite all right, old man," he said softly. "It's really my fault; I should have known better. Well, I wish you luck with the police."

"Not the police, I told you, but the detectives. And as for your money, have no fear. I will send somebody to pay you. Yes, you shall be paid very well indeed."

"I understand. Of course," said the uncomfortable Ryley. "Run along now."

The stranger stared at him for a moment with his deep eyes. Then he smiled, turned on his heels and left. Arthur Ryley returned to drumming his desk.

Two hours later, there was another knock at his door. Opening it, Ryley was confronted by two well-dressed elderly gentlemen, who asked him politely if he was the same American dentist who had filled a man's tooth with platinum a few hours before. Ryley, suspiciously, admitted that he was.

"Let us introduce ourselves, then," said one of the gentlemen. "I am Count Vorontzoff-Dashkoff, Minister of the Imperial House of Russia. At the order of his Imperial Majesty, Czar Alexander III, I have the great honor and pleasure to give you this deed of donation. You are now the owner of the Imperial Platinum Mine of Iss-Touru, in the Ural mountains."

"And I," said the other, "am Privy-Counsellor Vishnegradski. I am prepared to purchase the Emperor's gift from you for twelve million rubles."

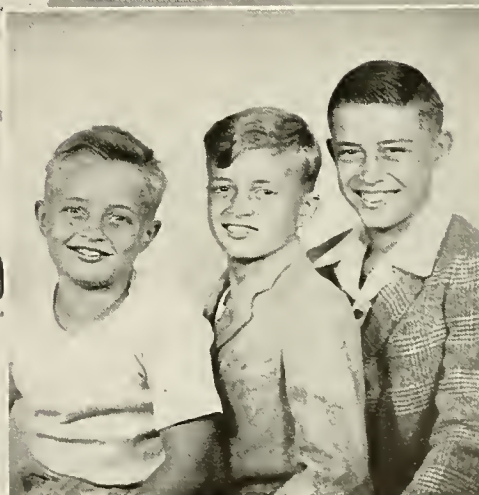

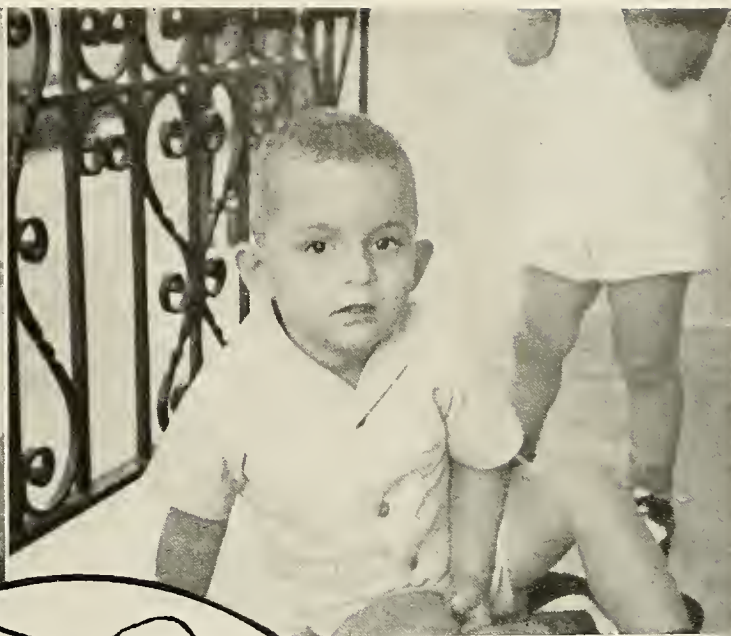

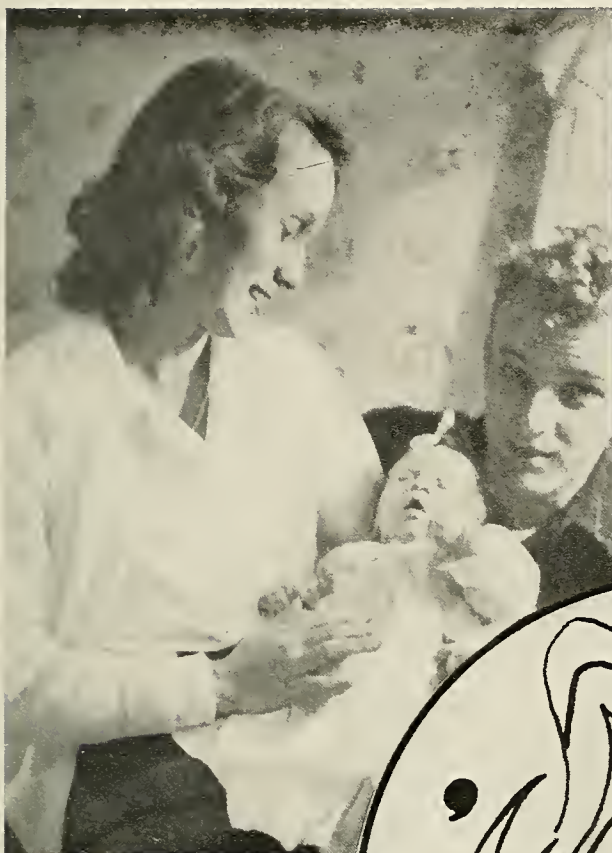

Arthur Ryley returned to the United States with his fortune—about $6,000,000—and he never filled another tooth.

A Parting Word

The last page—the close of a chapter—the Finis is written to the scholastic lives of seventy-four students. Yet there will be another volume far richer in chapters, far fuller in meaning, a volume entitled “Service to Humanity.”

With this page the 1947 MIRROR is completed, a task that required the cooperation of a very able staff and competent advisor, Mr. Foley, who willingly contributed their time and efforts to its production. My appreciation to Miss Chomet, Miss Ezekiel, Mr. Hicks, Mr. Love, Miss Rice, Miss Yent and the Library Staff for their valuable aid and helpful suggestions.

Let this MIRROR reflect the scenes of a nostalgic past when we think to look back on the days of toil and strife, of joy and pleasure, that were a part of the four years through which we passed during our preparation for the careers that lie ahead.

AN

"All Star"

PICTURE

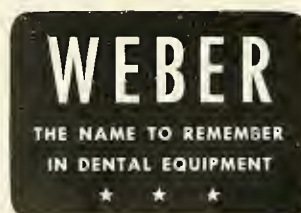

YOU WILL WANT TO BE IN

A COMPLETE WEBER OFFICE is like a stage perfectly set for a great performance. Each major item of equipment . . . Weber Chair, Majestic Unit, RayDex X-Ray . . . is the last word in efficiency and beauty. Each is a model selected to suit exactly the practitioner's needs and preferences, located so that his individual operating techniques may function with maximum skill and minimum effort. Plan now to "star" in such a "picture."

A complete Weber office designed and equipped especially for you will be a wise (and surprisingly moderate) investment that will pay big dividends in professional prestige and income for many years. Why not consult your Weber Dealer, and also write Weber for descriptive literature.
